- None click scrolling

Scroll any open window without having to click it first

Windows 10 has a very handy feature that lets you scroll any open window, even if it's not 'active' - in other words, you don't have to click the window before you scroll it.

This can save a lot of time if you're working simultaneously on a web page and a document, for example.

To enable this, click open Settings

- Open Settings
- Then go to Mouse and you get this screen which is self explanatory

"That's all Folks!"
